Financial Literacy -not just checking the box	The goal of providing financial education should be to educate and inform and to help those you are counseling lead more financially successful lives. Sometimes, providing this information is simply to "check the box" to show you're making the information available. If you lack time and resources but want to make your efforts count, join us to learn ways to engage and inform and to maximize your investment. When Staff Hit a Stumbling Block: Coaching the Underperforming Employee	One of the more difficult conversations to have in the workplace is with an underperforming employee. When staff hit a stumbling block and work below expectations, it can take away from other managerial responsibilities. It's important that everyone on the team recognizes and strives to do their very best. When all staff are working in tandem, they are more effective and happier in their roles. This webinar will help you coach underperforming employees. We'll share how to work with staff to help them enhance their performance through identifying areas for improvement, setting goals, and following through. Shifting Gears: Driving Students to the Finish Line with the Use of Debt Letters	Informed students make better academic, social, and financial choices. The right information can guide their decisions, particularly when it comes to borrowing. Far too many borrow each year without knowing how much they owe to date or how much they can expect to repay once they graduate. With student loan debt levels on the rise and projections that 40% of borrowers will default by 2023, it's important now more than ever to help them make sound choices through a variety of financial wellness efforts. The use of debt letters provide students with a summary of their current indebtedness so they're more informed of their borrowing obligation. Join this important session to learn how to incorporate debt letters into your financial wellness programs and put the brakes on uninformed borrowing decisions. Loan Rehabilitation: A Second Chance for Borrowers	Borrowers who default on their federal student loans face a myriad of financial and even emotional consequences. They lose access to Title IV aid, their credit score will drop, and they risk seizure of their tax refund and wage garnishment—all which can lead to emotional distress and other issues. Fortunately, borrowers have a chance for a refresh start. Join us as we discuss the details of loan rehabilitation, what borrowers should consider before rehabilitating, and how Cohort Catalyst®, our default management service, can get your defaulted borrowers back on track.
